An Interview With KEVIN COONEY Head Baseball Coach

Determination was the key to MSC's victory in the NCAA Division III World Series on May 31, 1987. Perhaps not as blessed with the natural talent of previous baseball teams, what distinguished the 1987 Indians was their determination and desire to win. One might say that they were gifted with the fighting spirit of the underdog.

With a regular season record of 30-14-1 they faced tough competition in the world series against teams from North Carolina and Wisconsin with records of 40-5-0 or better. In fact, the University of Wisconsin at Oshkosh had set a NCAA record with a team batting average of .428 in 1987.

Going into the first round of World Series play, MSC was ranked as the last team in a field of six. But four games later they emerged as the NCAA Division III champions; the first team in the history of the six team tournament to accomplish a four game sweep.

MSC baseball coach Kevin Cooney credits the team's confidence and determination, especially in close games against Upsala, Eastern Connecticut, and Wisconsin-Oshkosh. Cooney agreed with assistant coach Rick Giancola that the Upsala game was the turning point of the Indian's post-season play this year. After giving up a 9-1 lead, MSC came back from a 14-9 deficit in late innings to win the regional title and earn a trip to Marietta, Ohio for the NCAA World Series. According to Cooney, "They never doubted themselves. They knew they could win no matter what happened."

La Campana conducted an interview with Cooney to get a description of the excitement of the final game. Here is how he recalled the fourth game of the World Series against the University of Wisconsin at Oshkosh:

La Campana: Coach, what was it like to win the World Series? What was it like to be there for the final game?

Cooney: Going into the final day, the championship game was against a team that had a team batting average of .428, which was phenomenal. They set an NCAA record for team batting average. We beat them the previous day, 13-4, and now they had to beat us twice on the final day.

It was a game where we jumped out to an early lead, they got close, we increased our lead, they got close. They tied it and in the top of the ninth inning they went ahead by one run. We came in for the bottom of the ninth and I told the players we had them exactly where we wanted them—we were losing. The first batter came up, our shortstop Jim Fasano, and hit a home run down the right field line. It really pumped everybody up.

La Campana: I could imagine what it must have been like on the bench. They must have been going crazy.

Cooney: Oh, they were. I was coaching third base and, to be honest with you, it brought tears to my eyes. It was pure excitement. Jimmy was jumping and pointing at me as he ran the bases . . . It got everybody fired up.

Then we got a single. Then a good home run hitter, Pepe Herrera, turned out to hit what looked like the game-winning home run. This ball was hit deep and high down the left field line. My wife has a picture of me at home. I'm two feet off the ground watching the ball. And you see all the players are out of the dugout, just poised and waiting to see the ball go over the fence.

But the left fielder caught the ball. He made a tremendous catch, and doubled the runner off at first to end the inning. So we went from victory to 'Oh my God, we have to go and try to get these guys out again.' I was in total shock. I just sat down in my chair in the dugout. I was really emotionally drained.

La Campana: Did you say anything to the players?

Cooney: No, I didn't say anything. To be honest with you, coaches are always supposed to have an answer and I didn't. Jimmy Fasano, the kid who had hit the home run to tie the game, got everybody out of the dugout quick. Instead of sitting there brooding about it, slowly getting their gloves, he said 'let's get out there.' We were tied. We really weren't in bad shape because we were the home team.

They [Wisconsin] proceeded to score a run to go ahead in the top of the tenth inning. We came in, and again we were in that situation—we were behind. The first player up singled. The next player up was Leroy Horn. We decided he's not a good bunter so we didn't want to bunt, although that was the proper thing to do in that situation. He swings and misses on a lot of pitches so we didn't want to hit-and-run. So I told Leroy, 'Get a pitch you can hit out of the ball park.' He looked at me and laughed.

The count went to three and one and he got a pitch; he hit it out of the ball park and we won. All hell broke loose.

You say 'what was it like?' I saw the ball as it started up in the air and knew it was out. I threw my hat up in the air and just started doing somersaults on the ground along the third base line. My shortstop came out and jumped on top of me and just started hugging me and beating on me. We were both laying flat on the ground as Leroy ran past us into home plate.

My assistant coaches were holding everyone back from the field because if you touch the runner before he scores, the batter is out. They were straining, pushing all these excited players back.

La Campana: Your players probably weren't thinking about the rules at this point.

Cooney: Hell no. It was just an emotional outburst. A very, very emotional outburst by everyone. People were hugging, crying. I mean, you see this scene repeated over and over and over.

La Campana: On the World Series, yeah, but after going through a game like that

Cooney: Yes, it was very emotional. It was almost a four hour game. It was a difficult series. Again, when you're not expected to win . . . It was the most exciting thing. I said to reporters at the time that the only time I've ever felt this happy and spent was when I saw my son being born. That's the only comparison I can make to anything I've ever experienced in my lifetime . . . There was an impromptu twenty-five minute demonstration that occurred when the game was over. It took a long time before they could calm our people down and hand out the awards . . . It was the ultimate experience of a lifetime.

"What can you possibly do with a degree in linguistics?" friends ask.

My wife's answer: "Become a teacher and persuade ten other people to study linguistics."

My own answer is that I'm already using linguistics. In journalism, covering the telecommunications and computer industries; in a newsletter I write on the use, misuse and abuse of the English language in America and in occasional magazine articles.

Linguistics is far more than the study of grammar. In fact, a grammar in only one way of describing how a language works; moreover, all grammars leak. There are other ways of describing how a language functions.

One of the most useful courses I took in the six-year, part-time road to freedoom at MSC (after an 18-year hiatus) was "The Language of Propaganda." Politicians may be more notorious for using language to sway public opinion, but corporate executives do it, too. To a journalist, knowing how these techniques function is the first step in getting past the smokescreen of pettiffoggery to the truth.

John T. Harding (BA in Linguistics and English, January, 1987) has 23 years experience in journalism and writes on telecommunications, computers and consumer electronics for the business section of The Star-Ledger, Newark. In addition, he writes and publishes "Editor's Revenge," a newsletter on usage. And he has been known to march through the Student Center cafeteria on March 17 playing the bagpipes.

When I First Came To College, I Was Idealistic, Expecting A Change From The Conformist "Live For Today" Mentality I Suffered Through In High School. I Was Really Looking Forward To Meeting Open-Minded, Individualistic, Intelligent Thinkers.

By Jim Williams

I felt that college, by its very nature as a higher learning institution, would attract people similar to me.

That was three years ago. Save for a few special people, most students here are just reveling in four more years of high school. College for them is not a learning experience, but rather a reprieve from the real world. Any kind of social or political involvement on the part of these people is merely the following of some vogue trend, only to wither away when a new (and more exciting) trend comes along to take its place. Take South Africa for example. That cause was "in" about a year ago; now the excitement has faded. Why? Do they really think the atrocities have stopped? Or were they afraid to become more involved in the fight against racism and perhaps examine some of their own ideas? Maybe they couldn't dump their own racist stereotypes and permanently erase words like "nigger" from their vocabulary. I don't know, but in any case, the fervor over this issue came and went among college students in less than two years. And still the suffering continues.

The point I am trying to make is that college, like high school, is chock full of trendy, shallow, confused individuals who are vying for wide-scale mass acceptance by their peers. They believe in the acceptable causes, participate in acceptable activities, and generally behave in the traditional manner that society expects of college students. I have observed several vogue "college" ideas that have permeated this campus in the time I have spent here, and I have some questions to ask of the people who subscribe to these ideas.

1. COMPLAINING ABOUT "STUDENT APATHY"

Have you actually taken the time and effort to try to right the wrongs of our society? Do you serve as an example to those less willing to get involved? Are you genuinely concerned about the world around you? I would hope so, but my experiences have shown me that most of you think "apathy" is a cool sounding word and do little beyond that.

2. MOCKING OUT RELIGION

Are you generalizing the disgusting actions of those who exploit religion for profit to all religion in general? Do you take into account various social services (soup kitchens, homeless shelters, aid to struggling third-world peasants, etc.) provided by various religious groups? Have you internalized your own set of morals, principles, values and ethics?

3. PLAYING THE "NON-CONFORMIST"

Have you truly rejected our society's values (prejudice, greed, elitism, competition, etc.) or are you the same society in a different package? Are the various hairstyles and modes of dress something you believe in, or just a "neat" thing to do? You have the greatest potential to be the individual thinkers and leaders of a new social order. Unfortunately, most of you probably have no idea what that means.

4. "PARTYING"

Are you so inhibited that you can't have a good time without drugs and alcohol? Do you pollute yourself just to feel like one of the crowd? Do you actually think you are being "rebellious" by doing something generations old? My Clifton High School class of 1984's slogan was "Where's the party." Need I say any more?

The more I think about college students today, the less surprised I am. We are, after all, products of our society. And in a society such as the American one, is it any wonder that people are blinded by the smokescreen of self-indulgence and immediate gratification? Is it a shocking revelation that acceptance at any cost takes precedence over personal growth? I think not. Here, shallow flings take precedence over genuine commitment to ideals.

You are here at college to receive an education. However, you can learn more from observing than by reading books. You are blessed with the opportunity to open your eyes to the world around you and learn about other people and our society as a whole. But most of all, you have the chance to discover yourself and see what works for you. If this is done in the true sense, it quite often involves re-examination of your beliefs, goals, and ideals. This can be, by far, the most challenging facet of a college education. Very few people choose this route, but if you are daring enough, it can be a positive, enlightening experience. Come graduation time, you will also have more than a mere piece of paper to show for it.

Ever since my first day of classes at a nearby State College, I have enjoyed the special atmosphere of college campuses. Although I aspired to teach, I am particularly surprised to reflect back and discover that I have been involved with college students, faculty, and administrators for almost a quarter of a century. Sure doesn't seem that long.

Montclair is my adopted alma mater, I suppose you could say, and working to improve student life, the campus environment, and the administration of the college have all been challenges accepted with the special commitment one has when his vocation and avocation are the same.

This college is a wonderful place for students to learn, to grow, to experiment, and to expand their horizons — if they so choose. I enjoy being around to encourage them along in the way.

I think it's that attitude of,

"Well, what does it matter? You've got any trash you don't want, well put it on the street, the sidewalk, the ground."

That attitude of,

"What difference does it make?"

I suggested from time to time to pitch it in.

VOTE FOR YOURSELF

In 1963, about 25 years ago, the students here at Montclair State College wrote a constitution for representative government for themselves. They decided to adapt the principles the Founding Fathers used 200 years ago for the United States Constitution. Each incorporates the ideas of separation of powers, of a type of federalist system, and of "one man, one vote."

"One man, one vote" has served the SGA and its students especially well. The 1987 SGA election provided an excellent example of this principle in action. There was only one person running and you only got one vote. It was a perfect fit!

The cast of characters for our election wasn't nearly as impressive as that for national elections. The situation the candidates found themselves in was just as colorful, though. Like Gary Hart, SGA presidential candidate Rob Acerra found himself in shark infested waters. Rob came out unscathed. The race for vice president was interesting, too. On both the national and SGA levels, the question "Just what do you do as Vice President, anyway?" was prominent. The students of MSC were saved, however, when Lisa Harris remembered to read the SGA Constitution and Statutes before the debates.

The student electorate decided that the whole election was a sham. "There's only one guy running. Why bother voting; we all know he's going to win. Besides, the SGA is a joke. They never do anything."

The students elected to the SGA know the appropriate response, however. "There are only a few people who even care from what we can see.

Why even bother asking all of them? We already know who supports whom and who will vote. Besides, the students are a joke. They never do anything."

Which is at fault here, the system or the people? Clearly the students want to blame the system, but they should blame themselves. Instead of walking around complaining about the situation, they should do something. Why should the administration care what the students want if the students themselves do not seem to care? Voting when the candidate is running unopposed is just as important as voting for the best person when six are running against each other. Why? Because it tells the administration that the students believe that the people representing them do in fact know what their concerns are and are going to voice them.

The students, however, do not believe that the Student Government can do anything or that it even reflects their concerns. They see no improvement in lighting, or parking, or library hours, or water supplies, or English-speaking teachers. Why? Because the administration does not believe that the students will gather together to fight bad policy or to promote their own interests. The students do not bother to vote or show the least bit of an initiative to take the time to act on their complaints.

The Student Government represents the students, but it can only do so if the students are willing to put their time and effort where it is needed most, supporting what they believe and want. Convincing the administration to change something requires an indication from the students that they want something changed and they want it now, or else. The Student Government can only threaten the "or else," but the students' initiatives must prove it.

An initiative does not mean riots or sit-ins or those other "hippie ideas" which seemed to be so effective in the late 60's and early 70's, but which today's "dignified" business students see as artifacts to be scorned along with long hair, peace movements, and "finding one's space." Initiative is taking the time to vote, and knowing that the vote represents a choice, a desire to do, or even not to do, something. The vote represents a choice for not only oneself, but also a claim that certain policies are good for everyone in the community, to the benefit of the community. Each vote represents a combined and continuing commitment to our form of governmental representation, "of, by, and for the people."

The constitution of the United States, or of the Student Government, for that matter, is a document which is alive and effective only when the people who have accepted it as a structure for their society know what it means and what it can do. The failure to take the initiative in learning, thinking, and then acting represents the failure of the college student in its worst form. It also represents the failure of the people of a community to form a society in which all can have "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

La Campana Subject to Review

SGA Legislation Threatens Creative Control

By Mary Donnelly
Assistant Assignment Editor

In an attempt to improve yearbook quality, the SGA has announced plans to form a review committee to evaluate the contents of the yearbook prior to its publication.

In a vote taken last spring, the SGA approved La Campana's constitution and added article XVI which allowed the formation of a review committee. According to SGA Attorney General Oren Zeve, the committee was formed due to "concern for quality" of the yearbook content.

La Campana's Associate Editor Chris Cofone challenges the constitutionality of the formation of such a committee as it relates to the First Amendment in the Bill of Rights.

The First Amendment reads, "Congress shall make no law . . . prohibiting . . . or abridging . . . the freedom of speech, or of the press . . ."

Cofone said, "The SGA put the review committee in the La Campana constitution without the approval of the yearbook staff."

Zeve explained that the La Campana constitution contained a clause stating the inclusion of faculty and administration in the yearbook. The 1984 yearbook did not include them. Zeve said, "The yearbook represents MSC; there was concern as to how the college was being represented by the 1984 book."

The La Campana constitution has since rescinded any articles referring to the inclusion of faculty and administration.

Zeve said other organizations are capable of being evaluated in an ongoing process where the progress of the organization may be reviewed. "The yearbook could only be evaluated after publication before this committee was set up."

In an attempt to seek legal council regarding prior restraint rulings, the yearbook editors contacted the Student Press Law Center located in Washington, D.C. Mark Goodman, executive director of the SPLC, stated in a letter, "The United States Supreme Court has consistently recognized that prior restraints of publication are the least tolerable form of First Amendment violation and come with a heavy presumption against their validity . . ."

In the public college environment, forms of prior restraint are no more tolerable."

Section One of the Review Committee article explains the composition of the committee. According to the article, two La Campana members, two non-SGA members, one administrator, and one faculty member agreed upon by the Editor-in-Chief of La Campana and the SGA president may sit on the committee. Goodman stated in a telephone interview that, "a faculty member or administrator would be sufficient to constitute government involvement."

Associate Editor Cofone expressed concern for future yearbook staff relations with the SGA. He said, "What if there are more problems between the yearbook and the SGA in the future? This committee can be used as a means of controlling the press."

Cofone stated the reorganization of the yearbook and staff has produced possible award-winning books. He explained a critique of the 1984 and 1985 books produced positive praise. "Why now put a restraint such as this committee on the yearbook when the book is clearly progressing?" he said.

As part of its argument against the review committee, the yearbook points to other clubs and Class I organizations. Cofone said, "The SGA does not tell The Mariner or the Quarterly what to print." Cofone cited the policy of post-evaluations of these organizations in the review of their activities.

Cofone said, "A post-evaluation of the yearbook will set guidelines for what the 1987 book and future books will contain

Review Or Censorship?

Enter into the logs a new complaint against the Student Government Association, Inc. of MSC. This from the collected voice of all those concerned with First Amendment rights.

LaCampana, MSC's yearbook, has had the dubious distinction of having an amendment added to their constitution initiating a "review committee." The committee, if its true purpose is review, would not be objectionable. The last time we checked our dictionaries here at The Montclarian, The word review meant criticism after an event, in this case, the publication of the yearbook.

But wait. The yearbook review committee is said to convene before the yearbook is sent out to be printed, and is empowered to "judge" what may or may not be printed. Thus, it is, at its meekest, a preview committee. At its worst, it is an instrument of prior restraint. Checking our U.S. Constitution this time, we find prior restraint to be illegal. Uh-oh.

Problem. What happened to freedom of the press?

Next Wednesday the SGA legislature is planning to question the constitutionality of the amendment to La Campana's constitution. Not knowing that outcome and not concerning ourselves with legal precedents, The Montclarian feels that this amendment is wrong. It has no positive purpose, and will be a threat to our rights of free expression.

The SGA, the governing body of all Class One organizations, of which La Campana is one, has lost sight of its priorities. Their primary goal it seems is to restrain and control the organizations which it charters. Instead of trying to flex its muscles, it should be helping facilitate production of a yearbook, or a newspaper, or a concert. It says, "Do things perfectly, or else!" it does very little to help achieve that perfection which it demands from other organizations but so rarely achieves itself. That is a shame.

The SGA has alienated La Campana by forcing this committee upon them. And we assure you that the yearbook is not the only discontented organization under the auspices of the SGA.

The SGA sponsors 13 Class One organizations in order to provide the students with the widest variety of programming possible. Student leaders are elected to head these groups because they are best suited for these positions. La Campana's staff is there because they are the ones dedicated to putting together a yearbook. The SGA is there to provide the money and (supposedly) to support. That's all.

The SGA, by chartering La Campana to produce a yearbook, has given them de facto creative control. La Campana is there to produce a yearbook for the entire student body, not just the SGA. If the SGA feels the need to monitor La Campana, perhaps they should publish their own book. But they can't.

In all fairness, the most recent provisions put into the La Campana constitution are the product of last year's SGA. It is our hope that this year's SGA can begin to recognize its true purpose and put an end to the alienation and deceit that has come to be associated with them.

SGA Criticized As 'Immature' And 'Elitist' SAS Receives Enthusiastic Support From Students

To the Editor:

Three cheers for the SAS. In this organization the students of MSC finally have an organization they can be proud of. I for one have waited a long time to see someone wear the legislators who attend the weekly dribble sessions that are held every Wednesday in the Student Center.

Some individuals have criticized the action of Students Against Students as "immature." Well I for one consider the actions of the Student Government Association immature.

When the legislators nabbed one of the SAS assault team, the poor fellow was put in a headlock and later grilled for two hours while being threatened with criminal prosecution.

SGA president Mark Brancaro then took action to make sure the incident received as little publicity as possible. SGA news reporter Mike Heelan had in his hands the hottest story to come out of an SGA meeting all year, but he allowed Brancaro to bully him into giving the incident a scant three line report at the bottom of the SGA news report. C'mon, the readers of The Montclairian deserve better than this.

So what we have here is a situation in which some fun-loving issue minded students decided to call attention to the absurdity of the SGA in an essentially harmless way. What followed was an SGA response that was in and of itself the height of immaturity.

Sources inform me that Students Against Students has completely reorganized and refurbished its ranks since their last adventure and they are now a formidable force that can not be caught or stopped. My information has it that the SAS is so cocky that their next jaunt will dare the SGA to find out who they are and leave these bureaucrats nothing but a shriveled mass of prataplasm helpless and unable to respond.

Andrew Jorgensen
Senior/recreational studies

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to last week's letter to the editor regarding the so-called attack at the February 18 SGA meeting by an organization called Students Against Students. Perhaps instead of SGA members immediately condemning these students as "immature," they should ask themselves why such an incident took place. Why would fellow students take such drastic measures? The SGA should take a look at itself and examine the possible causes for such student frustrations.

Also, I question the mentioning of the fact that this SAS organization is not an SGA chartered group. SGA legislators should realize that there are organizations on this campus that are not part of the SGA. There is not the only student organization in existence. Perhaps this elitist attitude is what sparks anger and frustration against the SGA.

"Free*"

A sketch of dignified miles defines our time,
where a sentence of iron fences
isolates a mire parish while figure-blinded men debate the size of corporate complex to erect to try to sell homogenized society
clandestinely pregnant with parameters they'll swear were there all along.
Chew
a rhetorical chide challenge and remember its flavor with the next stick given.

"New! Improved!"
views eschew the memory of youth in poly-prints and platform shoes.
Over what will we refuse to reminisce over scoops of blue food and computer juice?

Memories of a "Student Leader"

"Hey Chris." Ken's rough voice jolted me back to reality. I had been staring out the window, sitting there in the warm Partridge Hall classroom, pondering the future.

"Were you here Monday? Did he give any notes?" I opened my red spiral notebook and flipped to the section on abnormal psychology.

"Yeah, it was a lot. Here, take them."

"Thanks, dude."

"No problem."

I fixed my gaze back out the window, watching people walk hurriedly toward their cars in lot 13. It was about five before two in the afternoon. The weather was warm for the end of April; shorts and sunglasses were now the standard attire. It was a typical spring day or a typical American college. The smell of the spring air for some reason reminded me of those days many years ago when we played softball in number four school's playground. It seems like yesterday.

"Thanks Chris."

Ken broke my reverie again, giving back my notebook. At 2:00 the professor shuffled in. He started the day's lecture, enthusiastic and talking with his hands as always. I was too restless to listen that day. I looked out the window again.

Montclair State College had turned out to be an interesting place. Well, sometimes, anyway. For someone who had been involved in the shadowy world of student activities since my first day on campus, it was real interesting at times. It's truly a shame that most of you sheep never bothered to get involved while you were at good ol' MSC. Because if more of the student population took an active interest in what was happening at Montclair, there would be a lot less grumbling and griping about the college.

What is more unfortunate is that sometimes the people who try the hardest to improve things, like those in the class one organizations, often encounter the most difficulty in their efforts. As a former Editor-In-Chief of the yearbook, much of my time was spent arguing with SGA officials about silly things like an illegal "review committee" that they wanted to stick the organization with. So instead of working on the yearbook, I spent time disposing of a "review committee" - which, incidentally, was nothing more than a futile attempt at disguised censorship by the SGA, and whoever else might have wanted to control the press at MSC. Better luck next time, guys.

In any case, the student government at Montclair State has come a long way and has accomplished a great deal. Anyone who joins an organization or plays a sport contributes something to the college. What Montclair's volunteers need is more support from the rest of the student body, but that's another story.

Perhaps if the SGA did more research on the class one issues that come before them before acting they would avoid alienating students and subsequently a reputation that portrays it as a group that needs to prove its power. When the SGA wants to show that it is the master, it will slash the budget of a class one (like the yearbook) or wipe a class one out of existence (such as HRO, the Human Relations Organization). Such injustices could easily be avoided if only SGA officials would work more closely with the class one organizations. The SGA needs to understand that they are there to serve, not run the world.

SGA officials too often seem to be absorbed with the concept of being "student leaders." Being a student leader does not mean that one actually "leads" students. A student leader is simply someone who has attained a position of power . . . often because no one else wanted the job.

Holding a position of power in a class one organization can be frustrating when the SGA thinks they know more about your organization than you do, which of course they cannot, and do not. However, in order to take the SGA for a ride during budget time and avoid the frustration, many class one officers turn to using their acting skills . . . as the dramatics with which some class one presidents carry out their responsibilities proves.

The professor lit up his pipe, as he did at the end of every class. "See ya tomorrow, Chris," Ken said as he hoisted a bag over his shoulder and turned to follow everyone else out of the classroom. "Yeah. See ya tomorrow, Ken." I strolled out and headed over toward that tomb called the Student Center Annex. As I bounded down the stairs, passing students rushing to catch the shuttle bus to Clove, I thought about why people like myself bothered to get involved as deeply as we did. I guess it's because we hold firmly to the belief that the college was established for students and its way of life should be decided by students, not some faceless bureaucrat sitting behind a desk in Trenton.

I walked down the corridor that led to the yearbook office as I had done hundreds of times before, listening to the laughter and debating coming from the class one offices. Oren insisting to someone that he was right about something in Robert's Rules of Order. Kathy swearing at somebody in the Montclair office. Howling coming from the Players office; it was Pasquale trapped beneath a maze of debris. Larry the maintenance man preaching to some freshman about life. I wondered then if maybe what the future holds for Montclair State is not so much what my colleagues and myself have done, but what our successors will do. A sobering idea.

Music blasted out from the yearbook office. The door was propped open. Stepping over the threshold, I saw Dina at the back desk, talking on the phone as always. The sound of running water in the darkroom was barely audible. I turned to my left and went to Rodney's desk. Seated behind the clutter, the new Editor-In-Chief looked at me and held up some papers "Look. The SGA wants to cut our budget. They can't do that!" shrieked my normally mild-manner friend. I just looked at him and smiled. The circle is never broken.

The Calm Before The Storm

Lori Ann Alduss

there is no poem prophetic enough to change the course of a life, but that all of my articulatory forboding cont remains ignored.
perhaps it is the playing of words which makes me make a fool of myself so that I can write it down and pretend to have lived it if at all in style.
you see,
mine is the first fictional life.
totally subsumed and self-propelled;
no other being lives who can confirm who or what in me exists.

no one's speciality
no one's curious thesis, no evidence
in another's eyes

have left no irrefutable mark.
my stone remain blank
as well as not
I touch the lips and the face of the words I write and they are the testament to my gentleness they are the living intimacy, I know no other
no other knows me

There's Something That's Been Bugging Me, And It's Time I Got To Say It

Or

We're Not Enemies: We're Just On Different Sides Of The Fence

By Jim Nicosia
Editor-in-Chief
The Montclarion

I originally thought my last words to Montclair State College came with the last edition of The Montclarion. Then, Rodney Strubino graciously invited me to say some words in this, the class of 1987's yearbook. I naturally jumped at the opportunity.

It's amazing how quick four years went by, considering how after every single semester, I would wind up saying, "God, what a long fifteen weeks!" But now it's over and Rodney wanted me to say a goodbye here and expose some of the "knowledge" I gained as a supposedly reputable student leader. So, here goes.

At first, being on the newspaper, I was conditioned to believe that the entire SGA was the enemy and they all were "bad guys." It took awhile, but I eventually learned that one SGA person's actions, whether they come from a legislator or president, do not stand for the entire group. I did, however, learn that there is an SGA mentality. And that mentality is The Montclarion is its enemy and we're out to get them.

What only a very few SGA people got to realize is that we were not their enemy. I'm sure many feared Thursday morning's editorials. But that is only right. If there were any Student Government people making blunders or being two-faced, they should rightly fear it being published. That's how the so-called real world works.

For certain SGA people to expect The Montclarion or La Campana to be a "gosh, isn't the SGA great?" publication was unreasonable. Show me an issue of The Washington Post with a "Reagan done good" headline! It won't happen. What the SGA mentality fails to see is that by the mere nature of The Montclarion's existence as a newspaper, it has to oppose what it feels are wrong actions on the part of the SGA, or any other organization. That is our duty. No changes, good or bad, come from people sitting around in a circle, saying, "Well, Mark, we're all doing great and everything's wonderful and we're just tickled pink over everything." Nothing would get done.

What I learned only midway through my second semester as editor-in-chief was that the SGA was going to fear and criticize The Montclarion.

no matter what. But that's OK. It has a right to keep its distance. It has a right to criticize, as well - as long as it's not just sour grapes. Sometimes the SGA would attempt to get on the offensive against us. Some letter-writing SGA in-crowd cronies and in-crowd wanna-be's seemed to get a kick out of attacking our editorials. When the results from our Associated Collegiate Press came in, awarding us a Mark of Distinction (highest award in a particular area) for editorials/ we had the last word. Or so we thought. The announcement of this award at an SGA meeting received a cool response- but naturally. The SGA is not interested in hearing that one of their organizations is being recognized- not if it has a mind of its own, that is.

Face it, no politician likes the media. They have to learn to get along with the media, handle the questions professionally, and accept the fact that, since they are public figures, their mistakes will be heard and must be heard.

Again, I ask us to face the facts. Gory Hart is not a happy buckaroo right now, is he? How about Jim and Tammy Bakker? In all honesty, I believe my editorial board was quite reasonable, patient, and understanding. Past Montclairian staffs may have found more cause to rake this particular administration over the coals. The award for our editorials came not because we attacked the SGA, administration, campus police or residence life, but because we stated our points clearly, backed them up successfully, and made reasonable, logical conclusions. That, my friends, was our goal. And a successfully-completed one, I might add.

The SGA did do a lot of fine work this year, as always. They are in charge of the activities at MSC, and without the SGA, the rest of the student body would suffer. But, some people in the SGA were looking for The Montclairian and La Campana to be free promotional outlets for them. Mark Brancato expected a pro-SGA publicity campaign to skyrocket its popularity. I suppose that's why he requested an additional $900-per semester in free ads from The Montclairian when I entered my first term as editor-in-chief ($3000 wasn't enough). Apparently, he expected the entire campus to rally around him. That is where he made his mistake.

- Thanks Jim -

Senior Reflections Two, Too, To . . .

"What They Don't Tell You At MSC's Freshman Orientation"

by Oren Zeve

Are you now, or have you ever been, a member of the Communist Party?

1. Yeah, man, it was great! A buncha guys who party at the Rat and me held this great bash. Everybody had to wear grey, see. To get inside, ya had to wait on line, to get some food ya needed a special coupon and stand on line again. We had red punch and potato chips. Then right at midnight, this guy dressed up like Ollie, ya know, Ollie North, God's chosen hero, ran in with a machine gun-type water pistol and killed all the pinkoes.

2. In a way I was a member of a communist party, but it was an educational and social group. I enrolled in the course Marx and Marxism. Ever since high school I knew that the typical American incorrectly perceived what communism is, and was. How many people understand the context in which Marx wrote, "[Religion] is the opium of the people." We learned why third world countries such as those in Central America turn to Marxist or Leninist ideologies. I know why what the Soviet Union does is no longer the society envisioned by Lenin, even though the Politburo constantly pays homage to him.

3. Isn't that a new shop at the mall?

Ah yes, graduation . . . no more classes, forty five dollar used texts, or waiting in lines for us. By the middle of June we should know whether the degrees we were awarded two weeks prior will hold up in court. We may all be one credit short, some people just didn't reach the magic 128 after the spring semester. Of course they don't tell you that most colleges and universities only require 120 to get the sheepskin. And actually getting the diploma takes another five months, provided it doesn't arrive crinkled or ripped.

Ah yes graduation . . . it brings a sense of freedom, even autonomy, as we will be moving out, moving up, moving on. The college, too, experiences these feelings of freedom and autonomy in a way. There's room for new faces in the fall. These minds do not (yet) know all the little tricks and trades of the administration. These people will soon learn the same things we did and will have the same potential to rally the students and make waves. There usually isn't enough time, though, even for those on the five or six year plan. Face it, the more things change, the more they stay the same.

The college received autonomy in a different fashion as well. Due to the passage of state legislation, the administration has more freedom regarding self-determination. Tuition increases, hiring, purchasing, and other fiscal and managerial matters are now under the college's direct control. Now that there are fewer laws for the college to follow, it feels the need to place more restrictions and rearing requirements on the Student Government. They claim that the state's rules mandate these new activities. I guess if there's one lesson from the Reagan era, it's that the trickle down theory doesn't work for liberty, either. And for future SGA Presidents and Executive Boards: Beware of wolves in sheep's clothing.

Ah yes, graduation . . . that event in every student's life which implies that one has reached the culmination of those incremental bits of education. It's the reasoning behind 100 to 400 level courses, the need for prerequisites. Timing is important for accurate scheduling. Most upper level courses are offered only every two to three years, every five if required for graduation.

The implication that one's education is over is short-lived, however. Somewhere along the way they forgot to tell us that a Bachelor's Degree now equals a high school diploma, in constant education dollars. You will need a Master's Degree which takes another three or four years, six if you can't get tuition reimbursement. Even worse is the fact that those "wonderful" MBAs that everybody wants are now a dime a dozen, a baker's dozen.

Ah yes, graduation . . . the opportunity for us to make the world a better place is at hand. Soon people will no longer need to pay their IRS debts by sending in five cent-deposit cans from the city's streets. As today's business students attempt to model themselves after their yuppie elders, they forget that many yuppies took the time to squeeze in some conscientious activities in between the parties and texts. Money is the accessory, not the fashion.

So strap and think about it . . . why go to college?

1. To play my four years before the pro draft. If nobody selects me I'll just work for dad.
2. To learn, to grow, to make a difference.
3. To experiment with mousse, to have something for my resume, and to show off my new clothes.

Loose Extracts From The Mind

Mindless Delusions Of Abbreviated Grandeur

This is it, the end. I am sad it is over but relieved as well. When the last editor, Chris, finished the term, it still hadn't phased me that I was the Editor, that I had to put together a 300 page documentary of our lives here.

I wasn't allowed on my high school yearbook staff—here, I'm editor-in-chief?

Now, after $40,000.00 . . . Enough with the self-insight shit. This is the section that most SGA leaders and administrators read either first or last. In this section, the editor (me) finally gets the final word.

I didn't spend the time I did on this book for any SGA leader or any MSC administrator. I produced this publication for my own benefit, as well as all you seniors, not for now, but for twenty years from now, when you'll really appreciate it as a retrospect of your 4+ years here. I've also tried (against great odds) to keep this publication free, sort of as a gift, for all the time, money and aggravation you've spent here. Plus, it's always nice to leave with something, you know, like the gold watch thing.

I've received a lot of slack about the book being late, not being on time. "When is the yearbook coming out?" "Hey, what takes you so long?" Every year SGA legislators, rather than ask us how they can help, condemn us for not having the book out, not realizing what has to be done or what we have to work with to do it. Rather than have the legislators come to a Class One office to assist us during their legislative hour, they sit up on a Wednesday and think of ways to rid the SGA of such burdens as the Class Ones. I appreciate their state-of-being as distributors of the wealth of the students, but by what right do they threaten our very existence every year as a volunteer organization, when they don't even know what our very existence is about. As much as I respect the position of a Class One leader, an SGA leader, or even a legislator, they have no right to misuse that respect by lying and passing judgment on a Class One or its leader simply at whim. The years of hard work that the past editors and I have put into this organization seem wasted away everytime a legislator or an SGA "leader" asks why the yearbook gets the money it does, or implies that the yearbook needs to be taken over by the administration or be better advised. They always have one legislator who wants the SGA to take it under the SGA operations. Only then do they realize that means they'll have to do it, and GOD knows the SGA legislature does a hell'v a lot, especially to help to promote its Class Ones. (I'm being sarcastic . . . really.)

We can't, or at least I can't, end the year or book, (yearbook pun! Get it?) without blasting the SGA. I know it gets to be monotonous, like a yearly-accepted and often anticipated thing, but when you've got complete blundering idiots and fools running a $400,000.00 budget, as well as making policy about how to run your affairs (actually, my affairs) I just get so angry . . . you know?

I could spend pages . . . pages . . . and pages moaning about all the screw-ups our SGA accomplished this year, as well as the ones they didn't accomplish (but I know they tried). I could go on and on about how they didn't help the students in any of the areas they promised they would, or about how they didn't come to the aid of the students (Remember losing water in the dorms for a week, parking problems, the lousey, terrible, underhanded, low-down way they handled budget relations with the Class Ones, the bad attitude they had toward students, and destroying SGA morale?), but I won't.

We can't dwell on past EMBARRASMENTS and MISTAKES. We have to look ahead, to a future of bliss and harmony, of peace and tranquility between us and them. Plus, I think I made an exceptionally good yearbook, and I don't want it smeared with bad Karma. Mark (Shark) Blandaro and Mark (Scrunge) Skrabonja, please have a good life working in your small-minded, bureaucracy ridden, unaccomplishing jobs (even if they make you a lot of money).

If that's what you want out of this great and wonderful planet, I sure as hell won't strap you. Just don't come to my corner of it.

But seriously,
Just kidding.

ps. Should there be any confusion, this book is a Retrospect of the academic year from May 31, 9 pm, 1986 to June 1, 7 am, 1987.

Rob, from what I can tell you're doing a wonderful job. Good luck
